The Internet is growing at a rapid pace, giving people a wealth of wonderful new resources to enrich their lives, but there is also a dark side that parents and children need to consider as they incorporate it into their lives. In many cases, kids know more about the online world than their parents, but don't necessarily have the maturity to be able to deal with the inappropriate content and interactions with online "strangers" that are, in many cases, only a few clicks away from children who are exercising their natural curiosity.

The "Internet And Your Child" (IYC) is specifically designed to give parents and other care givers the tips, tools and resources they need to "catch up" with their kids and address situations that may arise in their own homes and schools.

IYC is a comprehensive Internet Safety and Education program designed for adults. Its goal is to provide information necessary to those who supervise children in the use of the Internet.
